Renewing the attractiveness of city living is one of the principal issues in contemporary urban planning, which seeks to create denser urban spaces on unused urban real estate. The residential development at Westhafen consists of both a linear building block that runs parallel with the street, containing light and spacious apartments, and two independent buildings that are set forward. Generously sized loggias, and the point buildings' top floors that were designed as belvederes, typify this special place on the Main waterfront with multifarious views of the harbour scenery. The three buildings are connected by a plateau devised as garden, under which an underground car park is hidden.
