Urban development, open space and mobility concepts are trend-setting in the competition design for the new Dietenbach district. In the immediate vicinity of the Vauban housing estate, an urban area with a district character was developed in the west of Freiburg. The basic prerequisite for the emergence of urbanity is a high structural density with small-scale parcelling as well as a good social and functional mix. Depending on the location within the district, closed and open block edge structures, but also the number of floors, alternate. The functional backbone and engine of the quarter is a metropolitan boulevard, whose multi-storey courtyard house types with residential and commercial courtyards inside the block create a high degree of urbanity and density. Buildings and open space are in a balanced relation.
